INTRODUCTION

This report is intended to give you a deeper understanding of Rob Conrad's Thinking Style, Behavioral Traits, and Interests in relation to the position of Advertising/Training Manager. Along with some insight into his motivations and challenge areas, it will provide you with useful tips to aid in his training and development.

What's in this report?

RESULTS SUMMARY Assessment results are compared to the Performance Model, which shows the range of scores typical for success in the position	DEFINITIONS Thinking Style and Behavioral Traits will be defined on the pages following the results summary	PERSONALIZED FEEDBACK You will receive feedback personalized for the individual based on the results and how they should be interpreted
---	---	---

What does the assessment measure?

THINKING STYLE

- Thinking Style is the ability to process information.
- It includes problem-solving, communication, interaction, and learning skills.
- Results are illustrated on scales ranging from 1 to 10.
- A higher score is not necessarily the best indicator of on-the-job performance.

BEHAVIORAL TRAITS

- Behavioral Traits are commonly observed actions that help define who someone is.
- Each scale is defined by two opposing, but equally valuable, end points.
- One side of the continuum is not better than the other.

INTERESTS

- The Interests section may predict motivation and potential satisfaction with various jobs.
- These are ranked in order from the highest- to lowest-scoring interest.

Distortion was not detected in this report. What does that mean?

Some candidates may answer in a way that is socially desirable or to make themselves look better, rather than respond candidly and risk disapproval. Based on his assessment results, it appears that Rob answered candidly.

COMPOSITE SCORE

Thinking Style

Composite Score A reflection of overall learning, reasoning, and problem-solving potential

The Composite Score is the combined score of the four other Thinking Style scales. Because looking at a person's Thinking Style comprehensively is most effective in a coaching context, it is the only Thinking Style scale discussed in this report.

- Rob fits the Performance Model for the Composite Score.
- He likely has good potential for learning new information.

What you need to know about Rob:

- He will respond best to being challenged in both training and daily work experiences.
- He generally learns new information best by applying it.
- Upon completing a training program, he should pick up new concepts relatively easily.
- Rob is capable of learning the necessary information to develop a strategic plan.
- Overall, he may be expected to complete a typical training program with success.

Management tips:

- Be sure to continually engage Rob and require hands-on involvement to avoid boredom on his part.
- Educate him about the reasons behind a task and the value it brings to the team's or organization's goals.
- Look for opportunities for him to be creative or solve problems to keep him invested in his work.

BOTTOM LINE:

Rob is an effective learner and is generally adaptive in most training situations.

PACE

Behavioral Traits

Pace Overall rate of task completion

< STEADY

RC

URGENT >

- Rob fits the Performance Model for Pace.
- He tends to be good with routine and works at a steady to moderate pace.

What you need to know about Rob:

- He tends to work at a steady, productive pace.
- Typically, he may not show a high sense of urgency.
- Rob probably doesn't like feeling pressured.
- At times, he could get caught up in the planning stages of a project.
- He will probably take steps with urgency when necessary.

Management tips:

- Suggest short-term goals and deadlines when situations call for urgency.
- Don't require him to switch gears too quickly.
- To prevent him from feeling stress or frustration, allow him adequate time to complete tasks with thoroughness.

BOTTOM LINE:

Rob may be most effective working in a relaxed environment, but will pick up the pace when necessary.

ASSERTIVENESS

Behavioral Traits

Assertiveness Expression of opinions and need for control

< UNASSUMING

RC

FORCEFUL >

- Rob does not fit the Performance Model for Assertiveness.
- He tends to be fairly diplomatic and has little desire for control over people or policies.

What you need to know about Rob:

- He is slow to be assertive and tends to be more of a follower than a leader.
- He has a limited need to be in charge or be in control of people and situations.
- Rob could be hesitant to enforce unpopular decisions.
- He may wait to offer his suggestions until he is comfortable that they will be welcomed.
- He tends to be more comfortable as a participant in a group rather than as the leader.

Management tips:

- When necessary, encourage his participation and spend time discussing his input.
- Take an active role as mediator, fostering his ability to express and defend himself in conflicts.
- Openly praise or reward team members who express their opinions to show that such behavior is valued.

BOTTOM LINE:

He is somewhat willing to influence others, but is most comfortable when offering opinions in a safe environment.

SOCIABILITY

Behavioral Traits

Sociability Desire for interaction with others

< RESERVED

RC

OUTGOING >

- Rob does not fit the Performance Model for Sociability.
- He tends to be fairly introverted and may often keep to himself.

What you need to know about Rob:

- He may be somewhat uncomfortable as the center of attention.
- He may not always involve others in a discussion about how things should be done.
- Rob tends to prefer working by himself, at least some of the time.
- He may occasionally reach out to others for feedback.
- He can likely work well without relying on strong personal relationships.

Management tips:

- Ask him how he prefers to be approached when you need him (email, phone, one-on-one, etc.).
- Provide some opportunities for him to socialize with his colleagues, but also recognize that this may be somewhat draining for him.
- Recognize that he appreciates a level of privacy and may be slightly more comfortable working independently or in very small groups.

BOTTOM LINE:

Rob is comfortable working alone, but willing to collaborate when necessary.

CONFORMITY

Behavioral Traits

Conformity Attitude on policies and supervision

< STRONG-WILLED

RC

COMPLIANT >

- Rob fits the Performance Model for Conformity.
- He may question or dispute established procedures and policies on occasion.

What you need to know about Rob:

- He would sometimes prefer to establish and follow his own course of action, in spite of directions from a manager or supervisor.
- He generally cooperates with most directives handed down from those in authority but may resent high-pressure leadership.
- Rob may become defensive with those in authority when receiving criticism or feedback.
- At times, he may engage in mild complaining about a procedure.
- He might sometimes defend his point of view, even if someone in authority disagrees with him.

Management tips:

- Acknowledge the value of questioning policies and procedures, but also encourage him to listen to explanations of why things are the way they are.
- Allow him opportunities to work in his own way, but be clear about policies that are non-negotiable.
- Invite him to share, in a constructive manner, any ideas on how policies can be improved.

BOTTOM LINE:

He can work without strict policies and procedures but accepts them as needed.

OUTLOOK

Behavioral Traits

Outlook Anticipation of outcomes and motives

< SKEPTICAL

TRUSTING >

RC

- Rob fits the Performance Model for Outlook.
- He tends to be very optimistic and accepting.

What you need to know about Rob:

- He has a highly positive attitude concerning risk, change, and unexpected challenges.
- He is likely to be optimistic about changes to policies and procedures and enthusiastic about their possible benefits.
- Most likely, Rob will focus on the positive when problems arise and remain hopeful that the best solution will be found.
- He is not usually skeptical of others' motives, often accepting what they say at face value.
- His faith in the results of some projects may be so optimistic that it allows for mistakes and unforeseen conflicts to occur.

Management tips:

- Encourage him to think critically about ideas and projects to unearth potential problems.
- Challenge him to come up with additional options rather than just going with the first suggestion.
- Be sure that others don't begin taking advantage of his optimism.

BOTTOM LINE:

Rob consistently maintains a positive point of view and is very trusting of people and situations.

DECISIVENESS

Behavioral Traits

Decisiveness Use of speed and caution to make decisions

< DELIBERATE

RC

BOLD >

- Rob fits the Performance Model for Decisiveness.
- He prefers to take some time to think carefully before making a decision.

What you need to know about Rob:

- Rob is capable of making timely decisions, but may hesitate when under stress.
- He usually takes time to collect supporting information and data before drawing conclusions.
- Most likely, he will carefully weigh the risks of a situation before making a decision.
- If he feels disorganized or ill-prepared, Rob may delay important decisions.
- He likely prefers to have a reasonable amount of time to consider significant decisions.

Management tips:

- Encourage him to find a constructive way to evaluate ideas such as listing pros and cons.
- Set a clear deadline for when you require an answer.
- Give him opportunities to make smaller or less critical decisions in a more timely fashion.

BOTTOM LINE:

He prefers to make careful, informed decisions, but can be convinced to draw quicker conclusions when urgency is required.

ACCOMMODATION

Behavioral Traits

Accommodation Inclination to tend to others' needs and ideas

< STEADFAST

AGREEABLE >

RC

- Rob fits the Performance Model for Accommodating.
- He tends to be fairly agreeable and willing to go along with the group.

What you need to know about Rob:

- He tends to have a cooperative outlook and is generally prepared to help others.
- Usually, he recognizes the need for working with others and is willing to share resources and information.
- When it comes to most issues, he is more likely to express a moderate opinion than an extreme one.
- Rob is generally pleasant, friendly, and patient.
- He will probably seek solutions that are acceptable to everyone.

Management tips:

- Encourage him to express his opinions rather than just going along with the group.
- Provide opportunities for him to build his self-confidence so that he is more likely to speak up with a differing opinion.
- When appropriate, enlist his aid to help colleagues reach compromises.

BOTTOM LINE:

He is attentive to others but also appreciates the forum to express a contrary point of view.

INDEPENDENCE

Behavioral Traits

Independence Level of preference for instruction and guidance

< RELIANT

AUTONOMOUS >

RC

- Rob fits the Performance Model for Independence.
- He often likes to set his own direction.

What you need to know about Rob:

- He generally prefers minimal supervision when carrying out important tasks.
- On occasion, he may want more guidance and instruction.
- Rob is usually self-sufficient and willing to take on new developments or challenges on his own.
- He prefers to decide his own course of action in most situations.
- He is comfortable solving problems and handling situations independently when necessary.

Management tips:

- Give him a reasonable amount of control over his work.
- If he is working independently, check in from time to time to make sure he is on track.
- When you need to limit his freedom, make sure you explain why it's necessary.

BOTTOM LINE:

Rob is moderately independent but still accepts necessary guidance and instruction.

JUDGMENT

Behavioral Traits

Judgment Basis for forming opinions and making decisions

< INTUITIVE

FACTUAL >

RC

- Rob fits the Performance Model for Judgment.
- He tends to supplement objective facts with relevant subjectivity when making decisions.

What you need to know about Rob:

- He usually emphasizes logical deduction a bit more than intuition in his thinking.
- At times, he may neglect to consider the extenuating circumstances of a situation.
- He could overlook the potential value of instinct when determining solutions.
- He is seldom swayed by emotional pleas.
- Rob generally makes sensible, objective judgments.

Management tips:

- At times, you may need to remind him to look to his experience and intuition when considering a decision.
- Recognize that he may find it stressful if he is required to make decisions with limited information or data.
- When appropriate, encourage him to look at extenuating circumstances and use his personal judgment to make decisions.

BOTTOM LINE:

He typically uses judgment that reflects a balance of logic and practical experience.

What is Rob most interested in?

Mechanical: Rob seems to be motivated by Mechanical activities. He may enjoy building or repairing things, and he likely welcomes opportunities to get his "hands dirty" with objectives that are tangible, practical, and functional. If he can contribute in this way, he is more likely to feel enthusiastic about the project at hand.

Technical: Technical aspects of the job appear to interest Rob. Most likely, he will pursue activities that involve research, theories, and the application of technical information. He may be particularly interested in analytical or conceptual tasks that require critical thinking.

Financial/Admin: Rob appears to be interested in Financial or Administrative tasks. Therefore, he is likely to seek out activities that involve organizing or otherwise dealing with budgets, information, and/or supplies. A main source of motivation for him may be in classifying and managing information.

BOTTOM LINE:

Rob may not find Creative, Enterprising, and People Service activities as motivating as others who have been successful in this position.
